

FOR CREATIVE STRATEGISTS

Copywriting is a skill.

Creative strategy is a combination of skills.

WHAT A COPYWRITER DOES

A copywriter follows a brief. The client hands over the job. The copywriter delivers the words.

It is an executioner role. You run the play someone else called.

Typical rate: $200 to $500 per project.

WHAT A CREATIVE STRATEGIST DOES

A creative strategist decides what the play is. You read the data. You talk to the market. You pick the offer angle. You brief the junior writers, the media buyers, the video editors. You report back to the client.

It is a decision-making role. You lead the room.

Typical rate: $3,000 to $10,000 per month.

THE REAL JUMP IS NOT WRITING

If you can write copy, you already do the research, the market reading, the offer thinking. That part is not the ceiling.

The ceiling is the work around the writing.

THREE SKILLS THAT RAISE YOUR RATE

- 1 Reading numbers on an ad account and knowing what to test next.
- 2 Running a team of junior writers, editors, and buyers.
- 3 Reporting results to a client in one page, not twenty.

WHY WRITING ALONE KEEPS YOU AT $500

You can keep writing better copy for years. The rate does not move much.

The rate moves when a client trusts you to make calls for their ad account.

ONE WAY TO TEST WHERE YOU STAND

Read a winning Facebook ad from a brand you know.

Write one page on why it is winning and what you would test next.

If you can do that in an hour, you are closer to creative strategy than you think.

Want to see where you stand?

Take the 3-minute creative strategy quiz at creativestrategyos.com/quiz.