

FOR BUSINESSES NEAR 100K

The seven days after a customer buys, email by email.

Seven emails across one week that a business near 100k keeps leaving empty.

7

@muddassir

Swipe →

DAY ZERO. WELCOME FROM A REAL PERSON

- 1 Section one is a one-sentence welcome that names the group the customer has joined, not the product they bought.
- 2 Section two is a three-line preview of what you will send them across the week, so nothing you send later feels like a surprise.
- 3 Section three is a reply invitation signed by a real person, not a brand address, and it goes out inside the first hour after the purchase.

DAY ONE. A SMALL WIN

- 1 Section one points them at one thing in the product they can finish inside ten minutes, so they end the day with something to show.
- 2 Section two shows what that small win looks like on their side, as a screenshot or a one-line description of the finished state.
- 3 Section three closes with the line after you do that, reply with what you ended up with, so engagement is designed into the email.

DAY TWO. A REAL STORY

- 1 Section one frames why the story is worth reading in one sentence that ties to the customer's own situation.
- 2 Section two carries the story itself in the customer's own words, as a quote, a screenshot, or a voice note, not a polished case study.
- 3 Section three translates one specific thing from that story the new buyer can do inside the product this week.

DAY THREE. A SECOND USE

1

Section one opens with the most important line in the sequence, which is that your product also solves a second problem for them.

2

Section two spells out that second problem in the buyer's own language and shows the path through your product to solve it.

3

Section three sets the expectation that a buyer who uses you for two things inside the first week tends to stay the longest.

DAY FOUR. A SMALL SETUP

- 1 Section one names a five-minute setup that saves them an hour later, such as a saved view, a template, or a connection to a tool they already use.
- 2 Section two walks them through the setup in three short steps, each written at a grade-3 reading level.
- 3 Section three tells them what they will notice next week because of this one small change, so the payoff is visible to them.

DAY FIVE. A SPECIFIC QUESTION

1

Section one opens with one line that lands in their week, not a generic check-in, and is signed by a real person.

2

Section two asks one specific question in a single sentence, such as what did you try this week that did not work, so a specific answer comes back.

3

Section three promises a reply from a real person within one working day, which is the one thing that makes the reply rate climb.

DAY SEVEN. A STANDING TIME

1

Section one suggests a day of the week and a moment in their routine where using you fits naturally, such as a Tuesday after lunch or a Sunday evening.

2

Section two reminds them what they set up and what they built across the week so the investment feels real.

3

Section three hands them a one-line weekly prompt they can save to their calendar, which is what turns a purchase into a habit.

NEXT STEP

Want me to help you build one?

Book a free call with me. Link in bio.

→ calendly.com/muddassir

@muddassir

09 / 09