

FOR CREATIVE STRATEGISTS

Your swipe folder is not a portfolio.

These four questions turn it into one.

THE PROBLEM

Most creative strategists collect ads and never read them.

Screenshots pile up. The folder gets long.
Nothing gets sharper about your own writing.

QUESTION ONE

Who is the first line talking to?

Picture a specific person. Age. Life stage. Mood.

If you cannot picture them, the ad is not as sharp as it looks, and you are about to learn something.

01

QUESTION TWO

What does it promise them in the first three seconds?

Not what is being sold. What is being promised.
In one sentence.

If you cannot write it in one sentence, the ad is losing a share of its audience right there.

02

QUESTION THREE

How does the ad make that promise believable?

A face on camera. A before and after. A stat. A mechanism. A customer quote.

Name the move. One named move a week sharpens your own writing.

03

QUESTION FOUR

What would you test next?

One specific change. Your hypothesis on what would happen.

This is the answer a creative strategist is paid to produce. Practice it before anyone pays you for it.

04

THE HABIT

One ad, one page, once a week.

Four questions. Written out.

By month three, you have a body of thinking that doubles as proof for prospects.

NEXT STEP

Ready to test your creative strategy skills?

Take the 3-minute creative strategy quiz.

→ creativestrategyos.com/quiz