

FOR CREATIVE STRATEGISTS

5-minute Meta Ad Library research.

Five things to look for before you write anything.

DO NOT COPY HOOKS

Copying the first line of a winning ad is the fastest way to write a losing one.

The hook worked for that brand, for that audience, this week. Pick it apart instead.

STEP 1. AGE OF THE AD

Filter by the last ninety days. Sort by start date.

If the same ad has been running for more than sixty days, it is working. The brand would have killed it otherwise.

Write that brand down.

01

STEP 2. HOOK FORMAT, NOT HOOK WORDS

DO NOT COPY

The exact first line of a winning ad.

DO COPY

The format. Talking head. Before and after. Text on stat. Name the format.

STEP 3. REPETITION ACROSS THEIR TOP FIVE

What pattern shows up in their top five ads?

If four of five start with a face on camera, that is the pattern winning for them.

You are reverse-engineering a research finding, not a script.

03

STEP 4. THE OFFER, NOT THE WORDS

What is the offer actually doing?

A trial. A bundle. A one-time price. A subscription with a floor.

The offer moves an ad more than the hook does. Write it down.

04

STEP 5. WHAT IS MISSING

What is not in any of their ads?

The angle they never run. The channel they never use. The promise they never make.

That gap is where your own ad goes.

05

FIVE THINGS TO NOTE ON ONE PAGE

- 1 Angle. The argument under the hook.
- 2 Mechanism. Why the ad says it works.
- 3 Proof. Face, stat, before and after, testimonial.
- 4 Call to action. What the ad asks for.
- 5 Emotional frame. Relief, aspiration, curiosity, urgency.

NEXT STEP

Want to see where you stand?

Take the 3-minute creative strategy quiz.

→ creativestrategyos.com/quiz