

FOR CREATIVE STRATEGISTS

How to niche down as a creative strategist.

Four questions. One page. One quarter of clarity.

THE HONEST FRAME

Picking a niche should not take a month.

You are going to try one for a quarter. If it does not fit, you pick another one.

The decision is smaller than the internet makes it out to be.

QUESTION ONE

Who have you already spent time around.

Friends, former clients, creators you follow. The niche you already know a little about is a better start than the niche you read a thread about last week.

01

QUESTION TWO

What kind of business do you read about for fun.

Not what you should study. What you actually click on when nobody is paying you to look.

02

QUESTION THREE

What channel do you understand best today.

Meta ads, Google ads, UGC, cold traffic funnels.

Pick the one you have spent the most hours inside this year.

Creative strategy is channel-specific.

03

QUESTION FOUR

Which businesses would pay for the thing you already know how to do.

Not the dream client. The three real businesses whose names you would type into an email this week.

04

THE OUTPUT

One sentence is all you need.

Who. How big. Which channel. What offer.

E-commerce skincare brands doing one to three million a year, running Meta ads, launching twice a year.

Something in that shape.

THE FIRST MOVE

Send one teardown this week.

Pick one business that fits your sentence.

Screenshot one of their ads. Three lines on what you would test next. Send it.

NEXT STEP

Want a read on where you stand?

Take the creative strategy test.

→ creativestrategyos.com/quiz